Smoking ban to hit New York City this weekend

New Yorkers were enjoying their last legal cigarettes Friday ahead of the city's tough new smoking law, which will ban cigarettes and cigars in nearly every bar and restaurant.

Faced with the upcoming ban, New Yorkers expressed diverse views. At the Bull Moose Bar, smoker Scott Potash was puzzled. He said,“( 1 )” Bar owner Martin Whelan is worried and angry. He said,“( 2 )”

Designed to protect workers in bars and restaurants that have allowed smoking, the ban was ( ア ) by Mayor Michael Bloomberg. It ( イ ) smoking in bars and restaurants, with very few exceptions, and the fines are strict. The penalty for a first-time *offense begins at $200, but multiple offenders run the ( A ) of having their business shut down. Since 1995, smoking has been banned in city restaurants with more than 35 seats. Smaller bars and restaurants have been exempt, but those exemptions ( ウ ) with this law.

At Joe's Pub on 46th Street, however, manager Britney Sheers said the ban may be good for business. She said,“( 3 )” Privately, several bar and restaurant owners say they will ignore the ban as long as possible, look ( B ) if patrons smoke, and hope the police will not heavily enforce the law. Given New York's reputation as a place where anything goes, many say they can't believe the ban will actually go into effect. “The ban will be so bad for business that it just won't last,” predicted Mel Cannon, a film maker taking a smoking break at McHale's Bar on Eighth Avenue. He said,“( 4 )”

Note *offense : illegal action or a crime
